As the story unfolds, Lalla seeks to own a "malafa," a traditional veil worn by the women of her community. With great determination, she embarks on a quest to find the perfect blue fabric to make her dream come true. Through this adventure, readers gain a deeper understanding of the significance of the malafa in Sahrawi culture, symbolizing beauty, identity, and spirituality.

A Cultural Exploration

One of the remarkable aspects of "Deep In The Sahara" is its ability to transport readers to a world rich in traditions and customs. Cunnane masterfully weaves descriptive details throughout the story, painting vivid images of the desert landscape, the colorful markets, and the warm communal gatherings.

Through her stunning prose, Cunnane introduces readers to the Sahrawi people's values and beliefs. The importance of hospitality, the celebration of communal meals, and the customs surrounding clothing and adornment are beautifully brought to life. Readers will find themselves immersed in a world where storytelling, music, and dance hold immense importance.

Empowering Female Characters

"Deep In The Sahara" provides a refreshing perspective on the role of women within the Sahrawi community. Lalla's determination to acquire her own malafa highlights the resilience and strength of women in a society where their voices are heard and their dreams are valued.

Cunnane emphasizes the importance of female empowerment by showcasing the supportive relationships among the women in the village and highlighting the leadership roles they hold. This portrayal challenges common stereotypes, fostering a sense of inspiration and admiration among readers of all ages.

Exploring Themes of Belonging and Identity

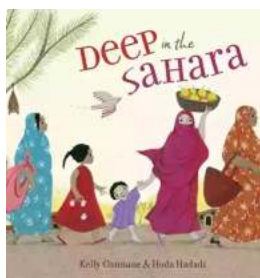

"Deep In The Sahara" beautifully touches upon universal themes of belonging and identity. As Lalla navigates her daily life and her quest for the malafa, readers witness her journey towards self-discovery.

This heartwarming narrative encourages readers to reflect on their own identities, while illuminating the beauty of cultural diversity and the significance of embracing one's roots. Lalla's story reminds us that our sense of belonging stems not only from the place we call home, but also from the connections we have with our heritage and traditions.

"Poetic language, attractive illustrations and a positive message about Islam, without any didacticism: a wonderful combination," declares Kirkus Reviews in a starred review.

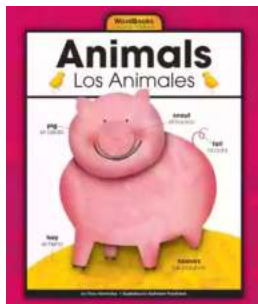

Lalla lives in the Muslim country of Mauritania, and more than anything, she wants to wear a malafa, the colorful cloth Mauritanian women, like her mama and big sister, wear to cover their heads and clothes in public. But it is not until Lalla realizes that a malafa is not just worn to show a woman's beauty and mystery or to honor tradition—a malafa for faith—that Lalla's mother agrees to slip a long cloth as blue as the ink in the Koran over Lalla's head, under her arm, and round and round her body. Then together, they pray.
