The last century was widely known of exiles, émigrés and phenomena of uproot. During India's partition, those who were living in the border areas were not immune to gross cruelty and millions of innocent people faced cold-blooded deaths. A lot of writings of distinguished writers, during nineteen fifties in India and Pakistan, have been overtaken by the cult of partition. Although, there are several books covering the gamut of India's partition, but Brajinder Kaur Dhillon's DUSK TO DAWN is refreshingly different because it is based upon profound personal experiences and that makes it more authentic. The title of this autobiography is befitting because it accurately reflects her terror stricken life. Actually, the author went through unimaginable miseries during her childhood -- "Those events haunted all her life." Not only this but the imprints of those wounds also were so deep that her memories remained solidified and frozen. However, with the change of time and condition after 60 years, the softening commenced and she consciously embarked upon writing this book.

The lurking events has constantly created the pulsating effects and exceedingly dramatic curiosity. The striking feature of this book is its simplicity and truthfulness in expression and description. She has taken a major task of mining her experiences and while doing that she has not lost her voice and identity. With masterful diction, she creates delicate feelings in favour of victims, evokes empathy for the suffers and unfolds the socio-political reality. No doubt, her style is lucid, rapid and fresh like a mountain stream. Her honest revelation of truth is so pronounced in her DUSK TO DAWN that she deserves a special place in literary circles.
