The Azaleas: A Burst of Colors

As you explore Patricia Rorke's garden, you'll encounter countless varieties of Azaleas. These stunning flowering shrubs create a visual spectacle with their vibrant colors, ranging from fiery reds to soft pinks, and from sunny yellows to pure whites. Their blossoms, clustered in delicate formations, add depth and character to the landscape.

The Rhododendrons: Nature's Delicate Art

Patricia Rorke's garden wouldn't be complete without the ethereal beauty of Rhododendrons. With their large, showy blooms and lush foliage, these flowering plants create an enchanting atmosphere. From the stunning purples and oranges to the soft pinks and whites, these delicate flowers are nature's artwork personified.

The Blossoming Roses: A Fragrant Euphoria

No garden is complete without the classic charm of roses, and Patricia Rorke's green haven is no exception. From the elegant hybrid teas to the romantic climbers, roses of all kinds bloom in an array of colors, enchanting visitors with their delicate petals and enticing fragrance. These blooms add an irresistible touch of elegance to the garden.

The Vibrant Hydrangeas: Nature's Color Palette

Hydrangeas are another common bush you'll find abundantly in Patricia Rorke's garden. With their large, voluminous flower heads, these shrubs create a spectacular display of colors, ranging from pure whites to deep pinks and rich blues. Their ability to change hues based on soil acidity adds an element of surprise and awe.

The Serene Lilies: Symbol of Purity and Beauty

Finally, we come to the serene lilies that grace Patricia Rorke's floral utopia. With their elegant petals and a heavenly fragrance, lilies symbolize purity, beauty, and rebirth. These magnificent blooms add a sense of tranquility and grace to the garden, making it a peaceful sanctuary.

In Patricia Rorke's green paradise, every common bush plays a crucial role in creating a harmonious and captivating landscape. From the vibrant Azaleas to the delicate Rhododendrons, the blossoming roses, the vibrant hydrangeas, and the serene lilies, this garden is a testament to Patricia Rorke's passion for greenery and her dedication to creating awe-inspiring spaces that nurture the soul. Visiting her green haven is an experience like no other, and it will leave you in awe of the wonders of nature and the magic of well-curated gardens.

Patricia Rorke was born in Rangoon, Burma (now Yangon in Myanmar) in 1923. Hers would be the last generation of the family to be born in the East; first war and then independence would intervene and the family's history would take up again back in the British Isles. But this book tells the story of the family from when it first touched ground on Indian soil in the 1840s, through life with the army, then settling as civilians in Burma and the many happy years spent there until the Japanese invasion forced the family to become refugees and evacuate to India, in the 1940s.

It is not a story of great events, of earth shattering decisions, but of the small things that mean so much to each of us and our families. It tells of going to school with peoples of other cultures, of trying to run a business in Rangoon (with mixed fortunes), of moving from house to house as life and fortune dictated, and of the complicated, overlapping circles of society in Burma where Patricia's father was car mechanic, lay preacher and ran arms and supplies to the Chinese and Chiang Kai Shek as the threat of the Japanese grew.

Viewed from the sometimes anxious, fast paced and challenging heights of the 21st Century, it can be easy to forget or simply not realise how different was the society enjoyed as children by relatives still within our midst. Take that society and move it from the relative safety of our own shores to the far flung colonies of the British Empire, to a place that would take considerable time and effort to reach and where British society and culture was imported and thoroughly mixed up with that of the local, perhaps older society, and you have the basis for a story that is as glamorous and exotic in its setting as it is warm and inviting in the telling.

"I may have, I suppose, painted too rosy a picture of the past, but it is my picture; it is how I saw things. And it must be remembered that I have a great love for my characters and I have, I hope, dealt gently with them. This I owe them." Patricia Rorke.
