Volume living in India is about optimizing every nook and corner of our homes, offices, and public spaces. It's about prioritizing functionality and aesthetics in equal measure and creating an environment that promotes productivity, creativity, and happiness.

Maximizing Space with Innovative Storage Solutions

One of the key aspects of volume living is making the most out of available space. Indian households have perfected the art of utilizing vertical space by incorporating innovative storage solutions. From wall-mounted shelves to multi-functional furniture pieces, Indians have pioneered space-saving techniques that are efficient and visually appealing.

Going beyond the traditional storage methods, Indians have also embraced the concept of minimalism and decluttering. By adopting a minimalist lifestyle, Indians have been able to free up space, clear their minds, and create a serene living environment.

Infusing Traditional Elements with Modern Design

India, known for its rich cultural heritage, seamlessly blends traditional elements with modern design in volume living. Whether it's incorporating traditional motifs in contemporary architecture or infusing ethnic-inspired furniture with minimalist aesthetics, Indians have found a way to celebrate their roots while embracing modern concepts.

This unique approach to volume living not only adds character and vibrancy to living spaces but also forms a strong connection with our heritage and ancestral traditions.

Creating Green Spaces in Urban Jungles

As urbanization becomes the norm, creating green spaces has become essential for volume living in India. Indians have realized the importance of reconnecting with nature and have adapted their living spaces accordingly.

From vertical gardens on high-rise buildings to community parks in densely populated areas, volume living in India emphasizes the need for greenery and open spaces. These nature-infused environments not only promote physical well-being but also have a positive impact on mental health.

Embracing the Joy of Shared Spaces

Volume living in India goes beyond personal spaces to include shared spaces. Indians have a strong sense of community and have always embraced the concept of shared living.

From joint families living under one roof to communal gardens and playgrounds, Indians have shown that shared spaces foster a sense of belonging and unity. These spaces encourage interaction, collaboration, and the sharing of resources, ultimately leading to a more sustainable way of living.

Om Khurana was born in 1931 into a Hindu family in an area of India that, with the Partition in 1947, became Muslim Pakistan. Almost overnight, law and order in that part of the country disappeared. Om and his family witnessed murderous atrocities as they and hundreds of thousands were forced to flee to safety in India as inter-religious violence erupted. Now a 16-year-old destitute refugee, Om lied about his age to get a job as a policeman in Delhi. Fast forward to 2018 where Om and his wife (82) still work full-time at their snack-food manufacturing and packing business in Essex, UK.

Volume 1 of this very personal and often intimate autobiography describes how Om almost died at birth; his childhood in a Gurukul (a Hindu religious boarding school) that was a mixture of happiness and very dark incidents; his life on the family farm and how he learned animal husbandry; a harsh school; how his mother's life was saved by a healer; the horrendous Partition years; his induction and service with the Delhi police force; Om's role at Gandhi's funeral; how, with help from a brother, Om studied engineering at Gwalior, and experienced happiness, despair and horror during his 4 years there. Volume 1 ends in 1958 with Om's family helping him to get a one-way ticket to England for further studies.

Volume 2 continues Om's story as a non-returning Indian in England.

Om has harsh words about the British Raj, Nehru, Jinnah, and even Gandhi. By turn tragic, moving, funny, uplifting, with strong opinions, Om's story and writing, with a lilt of Indian phrasing, is always compelling.
