Ernest Shackleton, Robert Scott, and Roald Amundsen are on a mission to get to the South Pole. It's a challenge that none of them is ready to give up, a goal of a lifetime that they're all eager to achieve. Each man has his own reason for wanting to reach the South Pole: for Amundsen it is dedication and determination; for Shackleton it's a sense of adventure; and for Scott, it's honor and patriotism. In this novel based on their real-life accounts, monologues from Shackleton, Scott, and Amundsen tell us about their mission to be the first to arrive at the South Pole.
