The Gupta Empire: A Renaissance of Art and Culture

After the Chandragupta Maurya era, India witnessed the rise of the Gupta Empire, often hailed as the "Golden Age" of Indian history. Flourishing from the 4th to the 6th century AD, this empire witnessed remarkable progress in art, science, and literature.

During this period, mathematics reached new heights with the concept of zero and the decimal system being introduced. A host of scholars, such as Aryabhata and Varahamihira, made significant contributions to the field of astronomy.

The Gupta Empire also witnessed exquisite art forms, including the creation of iconic cave temples such as the Ajanta and Ellora caves. Sculptures, paintings, and poetry flourished, depicting themes from religious stories and everyday life.

The Mughal Dynasty, spanning from the early 16th century to the mid-19th century, marked a period of immense cultural splendor in Indian history. With the arrival of Babur, the first Mughal emperor, India witnessed the fusion of Persian, Turkish, and Indian influences.

Under the reign of Akbar the Great, the Mughal Empire reached its zenith, with a harmonious blend of various religions and cultural traditions. The Mughal court

Prior to the colonial era, Indians traditionally followed a well-established chronological history as narrated in the Puranas starting from the Mahabharata era to the Gupta period. The regnal periods of the Brihadratha, Pradyota and Sisunaga dynasties of the Magadha Empire given in the Puranas clearly indicate that Mahapadma Nanda founded his Nanda dynasty 1500 years after the Mahabharata war. Evidently, the traditional chronology places Buddha in the 19th century BCE and Chandragupta Maurya in the beginning of the 16th century BCE. Colonial historians identified Sandrokottus with Chandragupta Maurya and dated him as the contemporary of Alexander and the date of Buddha nirvana has been brought forward by 1380 years and fixed around 483 BCE. In fact, the complex problems in Indian chronology arise from a misunderstanding of the epochs of ancient Indian eras. I have discovered that the Kurtakoti copper plate dated Saka 530 refers to a total solar eclipse occurred on 9th May 53 BCE in Northern Karnataka which conclusively establishes that the Saka era commenced in 583 BCE and the Sakanta era commenced in 78 CE. Historians mistakenly mixed up these two epochs which led to a chronological error of 660 years. Out of two contemporary copper plates found at Pranaveshvara temple, Talagunda, one plate is dated in the Saka era whereas, another is dated in the Sakanta era. Apart from this error of 660 years, later Jain historians inadvertently identified Ujjain King Chandragupta, a disciple of Bhadrabahu with the Maurya King Chandragupta which made Mahavira, a contemporary of Buddha. In reality, Buddha attained nirvana 675 years before the year of Mahavira nirvana. Puranas and the Burmese inscriptions clearly indicate that Buddha attained nirvana in 1864 BCE. Recent excavations at Lumbini and the radiocarbon samples collected from the Trench C5 at the center of the Buddhist shrine at Lumbini indicate an earliest date of 1681 BCE. There is a chronological error of 1380 years.
