Ancient Birthstones: Unveiling the Mystery

The concept of birthstones can be traced back thousands of years. Ancient civilizations such as the Egyptians, Greeks, and Romans had their own unique birthstone traditions.

For example, the Egyptians believed that gemstones had the power to protect their wearers from evil forces. They associated specific gemstones with the zodiac signs and created intricate jewelry pieces adorned with birthstones.

The Greeks believed that birthstones possessed supernatural powers and that wearing them during the assigned month could bring good fortune. They often wore birthstones as pendants or amulets.

The Romans connected birthstones with specific planets and their positions during the month of birth. They valued the relationship between gemstones and astrology, using birthstones to bring prosperity and ward off negative energy.

Birthstones in Modern Times

The idea of birthstones continued to evolve throughout history. In 1912, the American National Association of Jewelers created an official list of birthstones, which has been widely accepted and followed since then.

The modern birthstone list is well-known and commonly used today. It assigns a different gemstone to each month, allowing individuals to connect with their birth month through jewelry and gemstone choices.
