With a long and complex history, she has managed to carve out a significant following while sparking intense debates across various social and political spheres.

The Origins of Heathen Imperialism

Heathen imperialism, a term coined by Aviram herself, refers to the belief that the values, practices, and culture of a specific group should be imposed upon others to create a unified, dominant society. It draws inspiration from historical empires and their expansionist tendencies, aiming to establish a new order that reflects the virtues of a specific ideology.

Aviram's fascination with heathen imperialism emerged during her years as a student of history and political science. Her research into ancient civilizations and the mechanics of power shaped her worldview, prompting her to question prevailing notions of cultural relativism and multiculturalism.

The Controversy Surrounding Ziona Aviram

With the rise of Aviram's influence, a fierce backlash quickly followed. Critics accuse her of promoting a dangerous ideology that glorifies cultural hegemony and undermines individual freedoms. Aviram, however, has consistently defended her position, claiming that heathen imperialism is misunderstood and misrepresented. She believes that her detractors fail to grasp the nuanced nuances of her vision for a global society. Western civilisation needs a complete overhaul or it will fall apart one day or another. It has realised the most complete perversion of any rational order of things. Reign of matter, of gold, of machine, of number, it no longer possesses breath, or liberty, or light. The West has lost the sense of command and obedience. It has lost the sense of Action and of Contemplation. It has lost the sense of hierarchy, of spiritual power, of man-gods. It no longer knows nature. It is no longer, for Western man, a living body made of symbols, of gods and ritual gestures – a splendid cosmos, in which man moves freely, like a microcosm within the macrocosm: it has on the contrary decayed to an opaque and fatal exteriority, the mystery of which profane sciences seek to ignore by means of their little laws and their little hypotheses. The West no longer knows Wisdom: it no longer knows the majestic silence of those who have mastered themselves, the bright calm of the seers, the superb solar reality of those in whom the idea has become blood, life and power. Wisdom has been supplanted by the rhetoric of 'philosophy' and 'culture', the reign of teachers, of journalists, of sportsmen; of plans, of programs and of proclamations. It has succumbed to sentimental, religious, humanitarian contamination, and the race of men of fine words who run around madly exalting 'Becoming' and 'experience', because silence and contemplation frighten them.
