out some of these new frontiers and discuss their significance in shaping the future of international relations.

1. Withstanding the Changing Power Dynamics

The traditional power dynamics in international relations have undergone significant transformations in recent years. Issues such as climate change, deforestation, and resource depletion require global cooperation and innovative approaches. By mapping new frontiers in sustainable development and environmental diplomacy, scholars and practitioners can work towards a more sustainable and resilient future.

4. Cultural Diplomacy and Soft Power

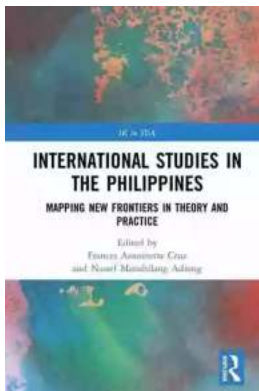

Traditional notions of power and influence in international relations often revolve around military might and economic strength. However, the importance of cultural diplomacy and soft power has gained significant attention in recent years. Understanding the role of cultural exchange, public diplomacy, and the ability to shape narratives is essential in mapping new frontiers that can foster understanding, cooperation, and lasting peace.

5. Gender and Intersectionality in International Relations

The field of international relations has historically been dominated by male voices and perspectives. However, there is an increasing recognition of the need to incorporate gender and intersectionality in theory and practice. By mapping out new frontiers that take into account diverse experiences and perspectives, international relations can become more inclusive and better address the complex challenges of our globalized world.

Mapping new frontiers in theory and practice is crucial in navigating the complex landscape of international relations. How can local experiences and the social transformation generated by modernity help to enrich our understanding of the international? What might a version of the much-discussed "non-Western International Relations (IR)" look like? What continuities and discontinuities from the Philippine experience in particular can be useful for understanding other post-colonial polities?

The Philippines makes a fascinating case study of a medium-sized, developing, post-colonial, multi-ethnic and multi-cultural state in Southeast Asia. Cruz, Adiong and their contributors map horizons of non-Western approaches in Philippine experiences of IR, rooted in the Global South, and in local customs and practice. Examining both theory and praxis, they explore issues as diverse as pre-colonial history, diplomacy, religion, agrarian reform and the Philippines' relationship with key regions in the Global South.

The book will appeal to researchers interested in Southeast Asian Studies and alternative perspectives on IR.
