This manuscript was completed by my father in 1983, shortly before his death. It is a first-hand account of the infamous Burma campaign in 1942, which featured the longest withdrawal in British military history, and about which little has been written.

The Allied troops had to deal with an enemy who was severely underestimated; lack of supplies; malaria; dysentery and scurvy.

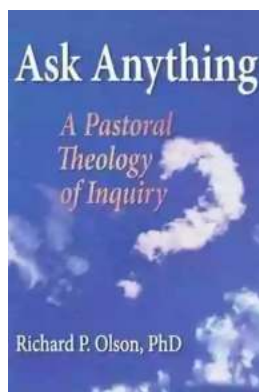

Fellow officer Philip Brennan, who was also at Dunkirk in 1940, exclaimed: “I’d rather do two Dunkirks than this”!

Much credit is given to the stalwart native troops who fought alongside the British, and the magnificent mules that carried the guns and equipment of this Mountain Battery.

In his foreword to this book, Major-General J. D. Lunt remarks: “One can actually smell the war in these pages”.
