Welcome to the exciting world of writing prompts.

Thinking up non-fiction prompts to write about can be difficult. You can get stuck in a rut of always using the same themes. In this book you have over 500 options. That's a lot to choose from.

Do you like to be challenged?

There are all sorts of writing prompts in this book. There are topics that need lots of research, ones that often cross over into other areas of learning. There are questions to ask yourself. There are surveys to do. There are expressions to evaluate. Many will tax your brain, that's for sure, and some may do that in ways you've never experienced before.

A prompt for every writing mood.

Not all the prompts in this book require huge essays. Some can be short, sharp sentences. Others may only need a paragraph to be finished. So, you really have no excuse. Whatever time you have available, there's something you can write about in this book.

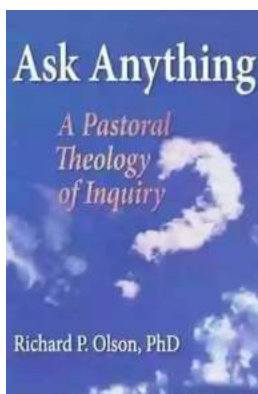

What are you waiting for? Time to get writing.

Oh, and one more thing. While you're waiting for this book to arrive, here are a few writing prompts to be going on with:

- How many ways can you organise bookshelves? Discuss the pros and cons of each.
- How many times can you fold a piece of paper? Why is this?
- Discuss the benefits of showers vs baths.
- Argue the case for more recycling facilities.
- How long do different kinds of insects live? Why do you think that is?
- Which trees do you like the best? Give your reasons.

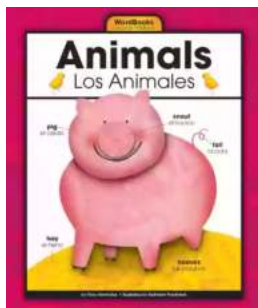

Over 500 Totally NOT Boring Writing Prompts for Kids: Non-Fiction is for children aged 9+ and really does contain over 500. It contains plenty of inspiration for enquiring minds, on subjects they might never have considered, in formats they've not yet used, and a chance to consider personal opinions on a variety of subjects, as well as new words to learn about.
