The Susquehanna River is the longest commercially non-navigable river in the United States, contributing approximately 50 percent of the fresh water entering the Chesapeake Bay and 43 percent of its pollution. While the Susquehanna and its tributaries deal with many issues, it also is cared for by a wide network of people who share a passion for our river-based resources.

In "Sentinels of the Susquehanna: Volume 1," Middle Susquehanna Riverkeeper John Zaktansky introduces the reader to more than 100 of those people of all backgrounds -- biologists, researchers, educators, watershed specialists, photographers, musicians, anglers, agency executives, students and many more. From fifth-graders to retirees, you will hear their stories as they relate to a variety of issues facing the Susquehanna and its tributaries. Abandoned mine drainage, microplastics, invasive species, sedimentation, nutrient runoff, fracking, fish kills, endocrine disruptors and much more.

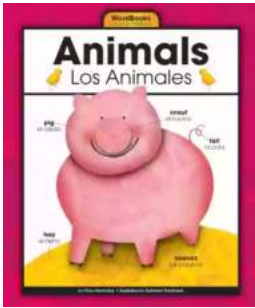

Through the 50-plus stories across 23 chapters, readers will also learn the importance of connecting young people to the outdoors and some of the efforts of the Middle Susquehanna Riverkeeper Association to provide that service while engaging audiences through other unique programs and initiatives.

Our ultimate hope, through telling these stories, is to inspire others to stand up and help their neighbors, their nearby watershed groups and the Middle Susquehanna Riverkeeper Association in protecting and promoting the health and vibrancy of the Susquehanna watershed.
