We pulled up just as the sun was about to set. Sulieman had his right hand laid on a big rock - there was a crowd of about thirty people (all family, as it turned out). Sulieman was crying - but no one was holding him - he was, indeed, a dutiful son - CPS hadn't penetrated here. His dad had a fancy, shining sword, holding it with both hands, and seemed fixing to bring it down and sever Sulieman's right hand. Kareem jumped out of the van before we even got stopped, ran like a bolt of lightning, fell on the ground, as he'd promised, and physically laid his neck on top of Sulieman's wrist, so they couldn't cut off Sulieman's wrist without first cutting off his head. He'd made a point to fall on his back, so the medallion was clearly visible - and the instant Achbar - Sulieman's dad, - saw it, he dropped the sword and fell on his knees, saying in Arabic, "Long live His Royal Highness, Crown Prince Kareem! Long live His Majesty, the Sultan!" Kareem stood, said a few words in Arabic, and Achbar bowed his head and replied. Then Kareem made the speech, using the plural "we" to describe himself - they'd taught him how to act like a prince, and he played the part well. What he said, went about like this: "His Highness, Prince Bandar, has granted us permission to come into his kingdom and extend to your son Sulieman the honor of serving Allah as a member of the Al Achsa Martyrs' Brigade. We perceive that you were about to impose the penalty of maiming upon your son, as the Holy Qur'an commands you to do. "However, he will be of more use to Al Achsa, and Islam, with two hands, which is the only reason we intervened to prevent your carrying out the just and proper sentence. He is your son, and we do not command you to enroll him in Al Achsa, nor do we forbid you to follow the commands of the Holy Qur'an; but we grant you the privilege of sending your son to be trained by Al Achsa for the greater glory of Islam, and the propagation of the true Muslim faith into all the world." Sic Semper Tyrannis is a memoir about a time, not so long past, when men were free, religious values were taken seriously. and parents were allowed to pass on the cultural heritage to their children without governmental interference. As David Selznick remarked concerning the Antebellum South, "Look for it only in books, for it is no more than a dream remembered, a Civilization gone with the wind . . . " This fictional account is the story of what might have been, had Christian parents possessed the courage of their convictions. It depicts the use of spanking and other types of physical correction, from the perspective of an adolescent boy. Twelve year old Billy Martin has been suddenly uprooted from the only home he knows, in liberal

Stockholm, and sent to live with his eighteen year old brother, Bob, who has recently joined an ultra-conservative religious group in Idaho. Billy, a high-spirited youth, has been allowed to run at loose ends for his entire life, and has never experienced discipline of any kind. He now finds himself in a vastly different world. Bob immediately sets about bringing his kid brother into line, and giving him the “Biblical discipline” that he, and the other sect members, consider essential to proper child rearing. Billy strives to come to grips with the new reality. While the characters are wholly imaginary, the issues they confront are real, and threaten to undermine the very foundations of our civilization. This work does not contain any erotic material, but is a sobering assessment of today’s child rearing practices in the United States and Western Europe. This is the thirty-second volume of a more extensive saga, which traces the course of Billy and his friends as they struggle through the years of adolescence, and should be required reading for every adolescent boy, his parents, and all those who seek to influence him.
