The Chief Justice declared: “Biblical admonitions cannot serve as a cloak for child abuse.” He added that the Court “admonishes Amicus for ill-founded attempts to influence the Court through intimidation,” and concluded: “The opinion of the court below is affirmed.”

Then he looked at Chris, as though he expected something to happen; when it did not, Justice Smathers began, “Respectfully, I dissent.” His opinion concluded: “A thousand generations of parents cannot have been mistaken.”

He ceased reading; the Chief Justice appeared uncertain what to do next. After a moment’s hesitation, he announced that the Court was adjourned.

Slowly, and quite deliberately, Chris rose and walked out. The President and his party were close behind us – the reporters were all sitting near the back, and had hurried out ahead of us. On the way out, I handed Chris the Testament. When we reached the door, I realized four of the justices were following us out.

I glanced back – only the five justices who'd formed the majority remained in the courtroom, sitting defiantly in their places. Chris strode determinedly, grimly, across the street, and mounted the platform we'd built. Then he turned facing the Court building, dropped on one knee, raised the Testament aloft, and called out sharply, "Behold the mighty power of God!"

The instant he did so, a bolt of lightning struck the court building, and it simply collapsed into a heap of rubble. A split second later the earth heaved beneath our feet. A cavern opened, the pile of rubble tumbled into it, and an instant later, the earth closed over it completely. One would never have supposed that any building had ever stood there.

The crowd, which had screamed when the lightning struck, the building collapsed, and the earth quaked, now simply gawked at Chris in stunned silence. He stood surveying the scene for a moment, then said clearly, "Quod erat demonstratum. Laudetur Jesus Christus in Aeternum. Kurios Christos. Sic Semper Tyrannis!"

I bowed my head and whispered, "Amen; may it ever be thus with tyrants!"

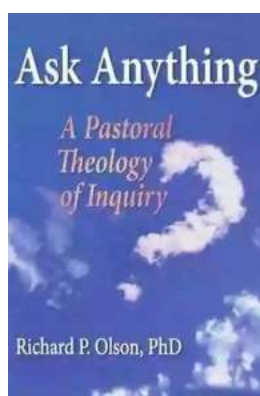

Sic Semper Tyrannis is a memoir about a time, not so long past, when men were free, religious values were taken seriously, and parents were allowed to pass on the cultural heritage to their children without governmental interference. As David Selznick remarked concerning the Antebellum South, "Look for it only in books, for it is no more than a dream remembered, a Civilization gone with the wind . . ."

This fictional account is the story of what might have been, had Christian parents possessed the courage of their convictions. It depicts the use of spanking and other types of physical correction, from the perspective of an adolescent boy.

Twelve year old Billy Martin has been suddenly uprooted from the only home he knows, in liberal Stockholm, and sent to live with his eighteen year old brother, Bob, who has recently joined an ultra-conservative religious group in Idaho. Billy, a high-spirited youth, has been allowed to run at loose ends for his entire life, and has never experienced discipline of any kind. He now finds himself in a vastly different world. Bob immediately sets about bringing his kid brother into line, and giving him the “Biblical discipline” that he, and the other sect members, consider essential to proper child rearing. Billy strives to come to grips with the new reality.

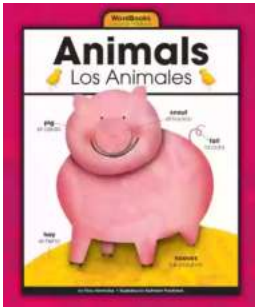

While the characters are wholly imaginary, the issues they confront are real, and threaten to undermine the very foundations of our civilization. This work does not contain any erotic material, but is a sobering assessment of today’s child rearing practices in the United States and Western Europe.

This is the fortieth volume of a more extensive saga, which traces the course of Billy and his friends as they struggle through the years of adolescence. It should be required reading for every adolescent boy, his parents, and all those who seek to influence him.
