A. Name the Countries

Show a world map to the students and ask them to name as many countries as they can. This activity tests their knowledge of geography and encourages them to think critically about different regions and their locations.

B. Create Your Own Map

Ask students to create their own maps, focusing on a specific region or country. They can include important landmarks, natural resources, and major cities.

Encourage them to present their maps to the class and explain the reasoning behind their design choices.

3. Current Events Discussion

Keeping students updated with current events is crucial for developing their understanding of the world. Engage them in discussions about recent news articles related to social sciences. Here are some suggested discussion questions:

1. What are some current challenges related to climate change?
2. How has globalization affected local economies?
3. What are the social and economic impacts of immigration?

4. Famous Historical Figures

Studying famous historical figures can provide valuable insights into different time periods and the impact of individuals on society. Create quizzes that test students' knowledge of influential figures. Here are a few sample questions:

1. Who was Martin Luther King Jr. and what were his contributions to the Civil Rights Movement?
2. What role did Marie Curie play in the field of science?
3. How did Mahatma Gandhi lead India to independence through nonviolent resistance?
