Ever since Roland T. Bird, curator of the New York Museum of Natural History, visited the Paluxy River near Glen Rose, Texas back in 1928 and took out dinosaur tracks to ship back to his museum, the tracks of the Paluxy have been shrouded in mystery and controversy. The dinosaur tracks were promptly put on display, but little known is the fact that he also took out some non-dinosaurian tracks that landed in the basement of the New York museum never to see the light of day. Why? From the evolutionary viewpoint of the museum, these tracks looked too much like human footprints to be shown to the public. Thus, the quest began to unravel and investigate the mystery tracks of the Paluxy. Many, many people, some credentialed, some not, have spent hundreds and hundreds of hours digging in the limestone rocks for human tracks like those in the basement of the New York museum. This writer joined the fray back in 1982 and vigorously pursued the perfect human track yearly and sometimes twice yearly ever since. You will have to read this book to find out how successful his pursuit has been.
