The Power of Long Descriptive Keywords in the Alt Attribute

The alt attribute, short for "alternative text," is a crucial component of HTML coding. It provides a text description of an image for users who are visually impaired or have their images disabled. In the case of Dream Street Tricia Elam Walker, using a long descriptive keyword in the alt attribute allows visually impaired readers to envision the story's visual elements.

For instance, the alt attribute for an image in Walker's book might read, "Silhouettes of two children sitting under a starlit sky, holding hands and gazing at the moon." This detailed description provides a visually impaired reader with a mental picture of the scene, enabling them to feel immersed in the story just like any other reader. By catering to all readers, Walker exhibits her commitment to inclusivity and accessibility in literature.
