Preserving Cultural Heritage

Through the African Toys New Civilization Workshop Series, we aim to preserve and promote African cultural heritage by educating individuals about the history and significance of these toys. It is crucial to understand that African toys are not merely playthings, but vital tools that transmit values, stories, and knowledge from one generation to the next.

Traditional African Playthings

One of the most striking aspects of African toys is the intricate craftsmanship exhibited in their creation. Take, for example, the wooden toys carved by the Makonde people of East Africa. These magnificent pieces showcase the remarkable skill and attention to detail possessed by the artisans who create them.

Captivating Imagination

African toys have an incredible ability to capture the imagination of both children and adults alike. They bridge the gap between reality and fantasy, allowing individuals to explore different narratives and create their own stories. From mythical creatures to imaginative characters, African toys offer a wide range of possibilities for endless hours of imaginative play and storytelling.

Unlocking the Past

Through the African Toys New Civilization Workshop Series, participants will have the opportunity to delve deeper into the history and significance of these toys. Experts in African culture and toy historians will guide attendees through various hands-on activities, presentations, and discussions to uncover the stories hidden within these playthings.

A Journey of Discovery and Appreciation

By actively engaging with African toys, participants in the New Civilization Workshop Series will gain a profound appreciation for the cultural richness embedded within them. These workshops provide a unique platform for individuals to connect with the heritage of African societies, learn about their values, and gain a deeper understanding of their history.

Embracing Diversity

African toys reflect the diversity of the continent, with each region showcasing its distinct style and narratives. By celebrating these toys through the workshop series, we aim to promote a deeper understanding and appreciation of African cultures, fostering a sense of unity and respect for diversity.

The African Toys New Civilization Workshop Series offers a captivating journey through the wonderful world of African toys, providing individuals with a unique opportunity to connect with a rich cultural heritage. Through hands-on experiences and expert guidance, participants will gain a deeper appreciation for the importance of these toys and their role in preserving and sharing African traditions and stories for generations to come.

Join us on this incredible adventure, as we unravel the mysteries and embrace the fascinating diversity of African toys, empowering us all to create a more inclusive and appreciative society.

Parenting strategies vary greatly in the world, from parent to parent and across generations and cultures. Recounted in the form of a narrative with dialogue, this workshop focuses on the Ntumu Tribe of Cameroon in West Africa, who have developed some interesting insights into a natural parenting; insights which recognizes that nature itself and the whole of a society are the fundamental parenting influences of individuals who never outgrow the need for parenting. At the core of their parenting process is an awareness that a shared sense of appropriateness is the essence of social cohesion. Even though the most apparent product of their parenting strategies is the willing and continuous transference of knowledge, among the Ntumu, wisdom is the goal of life and not the mere accumulation of knowledge. The acquisition of knowledge is seen as a natural consequence of living, whereas wisdom is not. The achievement of wisdom, especially collective wisdom, requires a stable social system which has at its foundation proven parenting strategies. The Impossibility Of Sharing African Toys is part of a series entitled: New Civilization Workshops. These facilitate the development of new ways of thinking about the arts, linguistics, organized religion, education, and social and economic development.
