

The Transformation Of Urban Space In Post Soviet Russia: A Journey Through Time

Post-Soviet Russia underwent a remarkable transformation in its urban space following the collapse of the Soviet Union. This article takes you on an engaging journey through time, exploring the evolution of towns and cities across the vast Russian landscape. From the abandoned relics of the Soviet era to the vibrant cultural hubs of today, discover how these urban spaces have adapted and reinvented themselves in the face of immense political, economic, and social changes.

The Legacy of Soviet Urban Planning

As the Soviet Union dissolved in 1991, it left behind a legacy of urban planning that shaped many cities in Russia. Soviet planners emphasized functionality over aesthetics, resulting in the construction of standardized apartment blocks and grandiose government buildings. These structures still dominate the urban landscapes, serving as a reminder of the country's turbulent past.

In the years since 1989, the societies of Russia and Eastern Europe have undergone a remarkable transformation from socialism to democracy and free market capitalism. Making an important contribution to the theoretical literature of urbanism and post-communist transition, this significant book considers the change in the spatial structure of post-Soviet urban spaces since the period of transition began. It argues that the era of transformation can be considered as largely complete, and that this has given way to a new stage of development as part of the global urban and economic system: post-transformation.

The authors examine the modern trends in the urban development of western and post-socialist countries, and explore the theories of the transformation and post-transformation of urban space. Providing a wealth of detailed qualitative research on the Russian city of St. Petersburg, the study examines the changing structure of its retail trade and services sector. Overall, this book is an important step forward in the study of the spatial dynamics of urban transformation in the former communist world.
