Illustrated examples are grouped by main verbs in this book.

In the attempt to achieve consistency in verb tenses, a general rule of thumb is that, when the main verb (or another dependent verb) is in the present, present perfect, future tense, imperative mood, and/or present subjunctive, and when the verb in the dependent clause refers to action that takes place at the same time or after the main verb, whether in actuality or not, present subjunctive should be used;

if the dependent verb refers to action that takes place before the main verb, or has been completed (whether in actuality or not), the dependent verb should be in the present perfect subjunctive.

(Working backward from the present subjunctive to obtain the infinitive, and working backward from the imperfect subjunctive to obtain the past or imperfect tense and then the infinitive, this kind of practice is an efficient way to learn verb conjugation.)
