Einstein said, "If you want your children to be intelligent, read them stories; if you want your children to be more intelligent, read them more stories." He emphasized the importance of reading stories in a child's cognitive development.

We believe that reading stories in two languages can maximize the positive effects of reading, because different languages are stored in different parts of the brain and bilingual stories can stimulate and activate more regions in the brain than monolingual stories.

So Einstein's quote can be changed into "If you want your children to be intelligent, read them monolingual stories; If you want your children to be more intelligent, read them bilingual stories!"

Raising bilingual kids is a long process. It requires determination, patience, practice and repetition. When you read bilingual stories to your child every day, you are training their language muscles.
