“Tim China” a man from a humble Welsh farming family who became one of the most influential shapers of 19th century China during its emergence from over 250 years of Manchu [Qing] rule.

His achievements were many – from the founding of the first western style university at Shansi – still in existence today – to the establishment of the first international famine relief organisation.

His motivation brought mobile medical facilities that dispensed modern medicines and techniques to a disbelieving population thus countering regular epidemics. His vision of providing wealth to the nation by industrialisation brought him to the attention of the ruling classes. His final role – adviser to the Emperor as the revolution unfolded.
