

Turbans And Tails Or Sketches In The Unromantic East

The East has always held a captivating allure for travelers from around the world. The vibrant culture, rich history, and exotic landscapes make it a fascinating destination to explore. One fascinating aspect of the East that often captures the attention of visitors is the traditional headwear known as turbans. These elegant and intricately wrapped pieces of cloth not only serve as a practical form of protection from the scorching sun but also carry deep cultural and religious significance.

The turban holds a significant place in the culture and history of many Eastern countries, such as India, Pakistan, Afghanistan, and parts of the Middle East. Its origins can be traced back thousands of years, and it has evolved to become a symbol of honor, respect, and identity. Turbans come in a wide variety of colors, styles, and materials, each representing a unique cultural group or region.

One of the most visually striking aspects of turbans is their intricate and elaborate knotting patterns. The way a turban is tied can convey a wealth of information about the wearer, such as their social status, occupation, or religious affiliation. Some turbans are tied in simple, minimalistic styles, while others are elaborately layered and draped, creating a majestic and regal appearance.

Yet, within the unromantic East lie countless untold tales waiting to be discovered.

These tales often portray the resilience, strength, and beauty of the people who call the East their home. Whether it is the story of a young girl pursuing her dreams against all odds or the struggles of a community coming together to overcome adversity, these tales offer a glimpse into the richness and diversity of Eastern cultures.

From bustling marketplaces to tranquil temples, every corner of the East holds a story waiting to be told. By immersing oneself in the local customs, traditions, and practices, a deeper appreciation for the region's history and heritage can be fostered.

This historical volume is from 1888.

From the book's Preface:

The times past may suffice for the publication of entire diaries by globe-trotters and holiday makers in the East. There be many who say that its faiths have been enumerated and analysed, its races catalogued and discussed, its mountains and plains, its seas and rivers described and pictured with sufficient completeness. Yet as long as different men in looking at the same object see different things, a few chapters of selected reminiscence may find a friendly welcome even though the reminiscence be of residence in well-known cities and travel along well-beaten tracks. In this hope the writer offers these pages to the public. He has made no endeavour after the conscientious exhaustiveness of treatment which marks the work of those who write for the instruction of their fellows. He writes avowedly for their recreation. Though he deals with subjects which he has studied with some care and in which his interest is deep, he claims no authority as an exponent of them and does not venture to ask the attention of the serious student.

These pages have been penned during holidays and at long intervals some in the early days of first and deep impressions, others in later years when scenes and customs once striking had become weary, stale, flat and unprofitable but always ...con amore.

They have been to the writer as the labour we delight in that physics pain and that is, therefore, a pleasure when less voluntary tasks would be sadly irksome.
Nevertheless, the line " Easy writing's curs'd hard reading," has been warningly and, it is hoped, profitably kept in mind. They have been written leisurely but not lazily. The writer has found pleasure in them but has spared no pains.
