Before children can learn how to form letters and write words, they must develop their pre-writing skills. These foundational skills involve hand-eye coordination, fine motor skills, pencil grip, and hand muscle strength. By engaging in pre-writing activities, toddlers can refine their ability to manipulate writing tools and gain the confidence necessary for formal writing instruction.

Research has shown that early exposure to pre-writing activities can positively influence a child's academic success later in life. These activities help children develop their cognitive abilities, problem-solving skills, and creativity, setting the stage for future learning.
