

Women Volunteer Corps Comfort Women Issue: The Forgotten Voices of Courage and Resilience

Throughout history, women have consistently demonstrated their unwavering commitment to serving and protecting their communities. From providing medical aid during times of war to advocating for social justice causes, women have played an integral role in shaping society, often stepping into volunteer roles when needed the most. However, there is one remarkable group of women volunteers that history has long forgotten – the Women Volunteer Corps during the Comfort Women Issue.

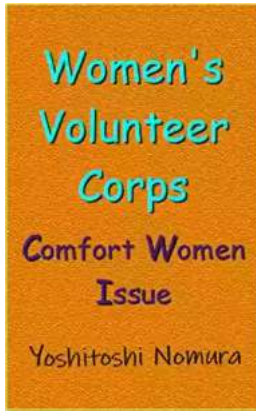

The term "Comfort Women" is a euphemism used by the Imperial Japanese Army during World War II to refer to women and girls who were forced into sexual slavery. These women endured unimaginable suffering and trauma at the hands of the Japanese military, and their stories have often been neglected or dismissed. However, amidst the darkness, a group of incredible women volunteers emerged as beacons of hope and compassion.

The Formation of the Women Volunteer Corps:

In the early 1930s, as tensions between Japan and neighboring countries rose, the Japanese government recognized the need for a support system for their military personnel stationed abroad. This led to the establishment of the Women's Volunteer Corps, an organization primarily composed of Japanese women who desired to serve their country and make a difference.

Why didn't we know it? The Comfort Women Issue appeared in Japan in the 1980s. Most Korean people had not known the Comfort Women Issue till the 1990s. The issue got known to many people world-wide in the 1990s. Why did we have to wait till the 1990s to know the Comfort Women Issue? Comfort women were not secluded from the people. People knew comfort women. Not only soldiers who used their service but people in general, including their families and neighbors knew the comfort women. So why didn't we know the Comfort Women Issue on a real-time basis? Why did we have to wait for about four decades to know the Comfort Women Issue? Korean people, in particular, should have known much earlier. The answer is clear and simple. It was fabricated after WWII. It is leftist's propaganda.
